Mesa State names new director of Montrose campus

Grand Junction – Mesa State College has named Joey Montoya Boese as director of its Montrose Campus.

Montoya Boese has worked at the Montrose campus since November 2005 as the assistant director. She replaces Ben Keefer. Keefer had served as both the Montrose campus director and as the director of Extended Studies and Outreach. He continues as extended studies director.

“The Mesa State Montrose Campus is a wonderful place to be; we have a dynamic team, including instructors and staff. We serve a diverse community, from all walks of life, with one common goal - increasing educational attainment,” Montoya Boese said. “I look forward to the opportunities and challenges of my new position. I am extremely honored to serve Mesa State and the greater Montrose community in a larger capacity.”

She attended Adams State College in Alamosa and double-majored in biology and marketing, attaining a Bachelor of Science and a minor in chemistry. She served as a marketing and public relations coordinator for Extended Studies at Adams State College for two and a half years. She is currently working on a Master of Science degree in Organizational Leadership through CSU-Global.
